Liver Cancer Awareness Month

October 2026

What is Liver Cancer Awareness Month?

Liver cancer begins when abnormal cells grow uncontrollably in the liver and can develop with few or no early symptoms. In 2026, an estimated 4,700 people in Canada will receive a liver-related cancer diagnosis, and 3,600 will die from these cancers. This Liver Cancer Awareness Month, ACCE stands with those affected and encourages everyone to know their risks and take steps to protect their liver health.

Did you know?

No symptoms doesn't mean no cancer

Liver cancer can grow quietly. In its early stages, it may cause no noticeable signs or symptoms, with symptoms often appearing only as the tumour grows. Warning signs can include unexplained weight loss, loss of appetite, pain in the upper-right abdomen, abdominal swelling, and yellowing of the skin or eyes (jaundice).

Hepatitis can become a cancer risk

You can have hepatitis and still feel perfectly healthy. Hepatitis B and C can cause years of silent inflammation and liver damage, sometimes leading to cirrhosis. Both infections are among the main risk factors for liver cancer.

A 6-month check can matter.

If you're at higher risk, especially if you have cirrhosis or chronic hepatitis B, you may need surveillance every 6 months, usually with an abdominal ultrasound, with or without an AFP blood test. Regular checks can help detect the disease earlier, when more treatment options may be available.

4 Things You Can Do to Lower Your Risk of Liver Cancer

Drink less and stay smoke-free

Small changes to your habits can make a difference to your liver.

Get vaccinated against hepatitis B

Preventing chronic infection helps protect your liver for the long term.

Know your hepatitis status

Hepatitis B & C can stay hidden for years. Testing helps catch them early.

Ask if screening is right for you

If you're at higher risk, regular screening can help you find cancer earlier.
